It is one of the prime support services needed for rapid growth and modernisation of various sectors of the economy. The same has become especially important in recent times because of growth of information technology and its significant potential for the impact on the rest of the economy. The available studies suggest that income of business entities and household increases by use of telecom services. In view of the global spread of COVID-19, all over the world, the importance of telecommunication network is much more than earlier. The need for un-interrupted network connectivity is indispensable both for the Government machinery as well as for the citizens for smooth communication and internet services through mobile and other communication medium including online classes for school and college students and online work from home for employees of Government Departments as well as private establishments.
